MOTOR TRUCK

Tried Out and Proved Its Value Wednesday.

The Forbes Manufacturing Co. has put another motor truck into service and in order to find out its adaptability for the uses for which it is intended made a test of it last Wednesday.

Among the many new contracts recently received by the company is a building at Cadiz, fully 18 miles from Hopkinsville, by the public road.

Wednesday morning picks, shovels, stakes and other tools were loaded on the truck and seven men then got in and the motor started out of town at 7:10. The trip was made in an hour and a half. After reaching Cadiz the foundation for the building was staked off, the excavation was completed and the party was back home at 6:30 p. m. That was certainly "going some" and doing something in a hurry.

The car brought back one more passenger than it carried down, but as the new passenger gave out a lot of his jokes on the return the trip seemed shorter than it really was. The passenger was Judge C. H. Bush, who happened to be in the truck capital on that day, and availed himself of the chance to make, if not his first, his longest motor run.

MOVING DAY

Trice & Waller Coming Lower Down On Main Street In The Fall.

A MODEL FURNITURE STORE.

The Hooser Building Won't Look Like Itself When Remodeled.

Very soon the last old business building, but one, on Main street will be a thing of the past—not that it is to be torn down but to be remodeled. So completely will it be changed that the Hooser building will hardly be recognized, especially in front.

The present owner, Mr. John B. Trice, is going to spend several thousand dollars to have it converted into a modern and more pretentious building. The plans and specifications have been completed by the architects, Messrs. Waller & Brodie, and are now in the hands of contractors, who are figuring on the cost.

Messrs. Waller & Trice, the furniture men and undertakers, have arranged with Mr. Trice to have the three-story building so arranged that its every feature will comply with the demands of their large and increasing business. Everything is to be ready for their occupancy by fall.

The drawings were made in accordance with the suggestions made by Messrs. Waller & Trice, who from a long experience, know what changes are necessary to make the building what it should be, and when completed it will be a model modern furniture and undertaking structure. In fact there will not be anything more up to date in the state.

Messrs. Waller & Trice will utilize the three stories of the building as well as a basement. The excavation necessary for the basement will be the first work done by the contractors when the contract is let. There can be no delay in the work after it is begun and everything must be completed before the end of the building season.

The old style front, which was up to date over half a century ago, is to be torn out from the sidewalk to the eaves. It will be replaced with a glass front—practically one show window reaching from the first floor to the ceiling of the second story. The ceiling of the lower room will be taken out and a balcony will extend around on each side and the rear end. The first floor and the balcony will be used for displaying furniture, rugs, etc.

The third story which will be reached by an electric elevator, deserves particular mention. Mr. Waller, the head of the undertaking department, has given the arrangement of the third floor very careful consideration and has evolved something in the way of convenience and adaptability for that branch of the business plans that are entirely new in this section of the state.

He is going to have several rooms partitioned off. One room will be used as a morgue and embalming room. He will have an operating table in one room, where physicians can hold post-mortem examinations when necessary. When the burial of a corpse has to be postponed for several days the remains can be taken care of. And when, on account of inclement weather, services cannot be held at the grave they can be held in a room that will be specially prepared for that purpose.

There will be an alcove in this room, separated by curtains. Pending preparations for burial, persons from a distance can occupy the room. It will be handsomely furnished, lighted with electricity, heated by a large fireplace, a lavatory near at hand, and will be just like any parlor in all its appointments. These

THE REUNION
HAS CLOSED

Jacksonville, Fla., Chosen For Next Meeting Place in 1914.

100,000 WITNESSED PARADE

Gen. Young And His Three Department Officers Unanimously Re-elected.

Chattanooga, Tenn., May 30.—The twenty-third annual reunion of Confederate Veterans came to a close last night.

Jacksonville, Fla., was selected as the place for holding the next reunion, after an interesting fight between several other cities. Wednesday afternoon over 100,000 persons witnessed the parade of the Sons of the Confederate Veterans. The pageant was several miles long and with dozens of bands playing "Dixie" the boys were cheered by the countless thousands along the line of March.

All the officers of the organization were re-elected. They are: Commander-in-Chief, Gen. Bennett H. Young, Louisville, Ky.; Commander of the Army of Northern Virginia, Lieut. Gen. Theodore S. Garnett, Norfolk, Va.; Commander of the Army of Tennessee, Lieut. Gen. George P. Harrison, Opelika, Ala.; Commander of the Trans-Mississippi Department, Lieut. Gen. K. M. Vanzandt, Fort Worth, Texas.

The most interesting event of the entire reunion was the parade of the veterans.

An interesting feature was the presentation of the report of the Confederate committee appointed at the Macon reunion to co-operate with a similar committee from the G. A. R. in regard to participation in the semi-centennial joint celebration of the two organizations, July 1 to 4, 1913. Gen. C. Irvine Walker of South Carolina, honorary commander-in-chief of the United Confederate Veterans, was the chairman of this committee, which urged that at least ten thousand Confederate veterans attend the celebration.

Death stalked in the midst of the cheering throng which participated in the impressive veterans' parade. Three aged soldiers, who came to renew campaign friendship made during the war between the states, responded for the last time to their regimental calls.

Robert Nolen, a veteran from Houston, Texas, fell down the steps of the city auditorium and sustained a broken neck.

B. F. Moore, of Fuqua, Texas, who was injured in a fall yesterday, died at a local infirmary today.

G. W. Mullenix of Lindale, Ga., entered a restaurant just after the veterans' parade was ended and dropped dead. Several veterans were exhausted by the trying ordeal of today's march, but at a late hour no additional deaths had been reported.

Advantages are quite obvious—not like one staying at a hotel over the night while the remains of a loved one are resting locked up in a room several squares away.

It is impossible to properly describe how the building will look when all the changes are made. Only the blue-prints can do this, and even they fall short of conveying a true idea. Waller & Trice are to be congratulated on having built up a business so large that their present quarters are altogether inadequate for their trade, growing larger and larger every year.

Mr. Trice, of the firm, was in one of the banks of the city from early manhood up to within about three years since. He has thoroughly refuted the assertion that a man raised in a bank cannot "fit in" in any other business. Systematic in his business methods, honest, square and straight in every transaction, sociable and gentlemanly, combined with a desire to make friends, he has developed into one of the best of the city's young business men.

He was thrown, but his foot caught in the gear and he was dragged some distance, his head striking a tree, fracturing his skull.

Letter From Siam.

Sand-bar in Nan River, May 5. Your letter reached me just as my things were being put into the boats, for my trip to Bangkok, so I brought it along, to answer on the way down. Last week I sent some pictures of Nan boats for you to see, so you have some idea of what I am to live in for the next five weeks. The boats are logs, hollowed out, with tops made of a foundation of bam-bas, covered with leaves. These are narrow quarters, but the air is better than that of a Pullman sleeper. There is just enough room inside to sit up straight, but we always stop on the bank for our meals and at night, so we get to stretch ourselves then.

The men have been catching some of the most beautiful trout I ever saw. In the afternoon they drift along slowly, one of the men standing in front with his net. He throws a stone into the water to attract the fish, I suppose, and as the boat approaches the spot, flings out his net, which covers a large surface, and then drags it in by a string which is tied to the center. They then take these beautiful fish and hash them in ten pieces for their curry. I have been hungry for a taste, though not the way they fix it, but there are seven men in the crowd and they have never gotten enough to divide.

There is no gun in the crowd, or we might have some peacock; I have wished more than once since I have been out here, that I were more proficient in the use of a gun, but I suppose it's fortunate for me I'm not, or I should be tempted to go out after big game. Yesterday we saw a small crocodile on the rocks, hunting for fish, and this morning a pure white squirrel, the first I have ever seen. There are several varieties of pretty water birds.

This is Sunday, and we have stopped for the day on a sand-bar. We have brought our beds, chairs and books to the bed of a stream that is now dry, and protected by the high banks from the heat of the sun. The breeze is fine, we can hear the rapids rushing below and mountains are all around. Running the rapids is great fun, though it will be rather slow coming up again. They are really not steep or large enough to be dangerous, but it is exhilarating.

Tuesday morning we were off again, and had rather an exciting day in the rapids. In one place we had to get out, and the men worked nearly an hour, pushing, pulling and poleing; it was at the place of which I sent pictures in my last letter. At one bad place the old boat captain fell off, and got three bad gashes on his limbs. It seems that on leaving, Dr. Peoples had jokingly told the other men not to let Poo Tip fall into the water, so they had great fun over this remark, when he finally did fall in. But the old man was so "sore" (in more ways than one) over his mishap, that they had to stop teasing him. We got out of the rapids yesterday, and the country is changing. Yesterday afternoon we came upon a colony of the little long-tailed monkeys in a dump of bamboos. We were not near enough to disturb them, and it was amusing to watch them drinking and playing together. Earlier in the day we had seen a short-tailed monkey as large as a bull dog.

Sunday afternoon the men brought in two large strings of as pretty fish as I ever saw. There were a few trout among them but most of them were white fish, with enormous mouths, and loose skin hanging in folds around them and between the eyes a huge knob of skin, covered with white pustules, very much like the warts on a toad. The largest one was two feet long, and the men said it weighed nine or ten pounds. It is full of bones, two-pronged, and I wondered if it was a sucker. I selected a trout and a small one of this other kind, and we had them for breakfast next day. I thought I had never eaten better fish. They had one fellow which was about 15 in. long, with a long flat, serpent-like head, and eyes that looked wicked, even in death. From each side of his mouth ran out a horny skin that tapered into a spine. These were about 4 inches long. The head was large, out of all proportion to the body which was round, like a snake, with fins, and tapered off gradually into the tail. It had no scales, and its body was a muddy yellow, with dark gray bands at intervals. I would have had to be pretty hungry to eat that thing.

More than a million people took advantage of the "educational trains" sent through the rural districts last year by the state agricultural colleges of thirty-one states,
according to figures compiled by F.
B. Jenks of the United States
Bureau of Education. In this way the colleges have brought knowledge of improved methods of farming home to many who would probably never have been reached in any other way. The educational train usually consists of three to ten coaches, well supplied with exhibits and demonstration apparatus and in charge of practical men who can talk interestingly on the farmer's real problems. The stops made by these trains range from two hours to half a day. Four state colleges
—those in Texas, California, Louisiana and Oklahoma—report attendance at the stops of these educational trains of a hundred thousand or more during the season. The Oklahoma institution takes the opportunity to attach to the train a car containing moving picture views of college activities, thus cleverly attracting the attention of the farm-boy to the possibilities of an education at the state college.

COLUMBIA HAS HERO

Chinese Brigadier General Studying American Politics.

Only 28 Years Old, Wang-Shai Led Charge Which Resulted in the Overthrow of the Manchus—Has Had an Exciting Career.

Columbia university has the distinction of numbering among its students
a brigadier general of the Chinese army. He is Chinfu Wang-Shai, one of the heroes of the battle of Nanking,
who has just arrived in New York and matriculated for the degree of doctor of philosophy in the faculty of political science at the Morningside Heights institution.

General Wang-Shai, who lives at Hartley hall, one of the Columbia dormitories, is very modest and unassuming. He is only twenty-eight years old, and few of his American fellow students suspect that they are rooming next to a man who has seen nearly a year of active military service in the most epoch making revolution of modern times.

The career of Chinfu Wang-Shai has been full of thrilling adventures. At the tender age of fifteen years he had to leave his native place in the province of Sze-Chuen, where his father is a mandarin of wealth and influence, because of his political speeches, in which he went so far as to publicly question the right of the Manchus to rule China. Young Chinfu had to flee Sze-Chuen. He disguised himself as a coolie and stole down the Yangtze to Shanghai, whence, with the aid of the revolutionary organization, he sailed for Tokio. At the Japanese capital Chinfu studied hard at his elementary education. He later entered Waseda university, where he specialized in political science and incidentally delved into the mystery of military science which was later to stand him in such good stead. All this time he was supporting himself by writing fiery revolutionary articles for the Chinese vernacular press at 50
yen a month.

Like all Chinese sons, Chinfu was filially pious. While he had disobeyed his father, he never lost his respect and love for him, and in 1910
at the risk of decapitation he stole back to Sze-Chuen to visit his parents.
The Manchus spies spotted him, but he escaped into Korea, and returned to Japan to continue his newspaper campaign against the Manchus. Early in the summer of 1911, when the riot
in Sze-Chuen took on serious proportions, Chinfu again went to China and in Wuchang, Hupeh, he plotted for the mutiny of the garrison. His machinations, Chinfu again went to China and governor placed a heavy price on his head and he had to flee. This time he went only as far as Shanghai,
where he imported a quantity of bombs from Japan. In October, when the mutiny in Wuchang broke out Shanghai was still held by a Manchu garrison. With Chen, Chunhsin, now minister of agriculture, Chinfu led a band of daredevil revolutionists and attacked the viceroy's yamen with bombs. The viceroy and taotai fled and left Shanghai in the hands of the rebels.

While Gen. Li Yuan-hung was fighting around the Hanang arsenal and Wuehang, the revolutionists marched on Nanking, Chinfu Wang-Shai personally led 10,000 men up Purple mountain, and succeeded in capturing the forts at the summit. This victory gave the rebels the key to Nanking and the siege of the town thereafter was an easy matter.

In the charge Col. Wang Shai had two horses shot under him and his cap was shot away three times. He finally fell from his horse with a splinter of a cannon ball in his right leg,
as a result of which he had to stay
two months in the hospital, and today he has still a perceptible limp. For this signal proof of bravery and gallantry in action, Colonel Wang-Shai
was promoted to brigadier general,
and was carried in triumph to Nanking with Gen. Shu Shao-Tseng, the commander-in-chief, when the city surrendered. When, a short time after his exploit, the provisional government was formed in Nanking, with Dr. Sun Yat-Sen at its head, the president appointed General Wang-Shai as his Pei-Shu, or military secretary, which he later resigned to become aide-de-camp to Field Marshal Huang Hsing.

Wang-Shai came to America because he thought that, inasmuch as the Chinese constitution was to be modeled after that of the United States, a thorough training in American political methods would help him.
He selected Columbia university because its faculty of political science was famous throughout China. He is now studying constitutional and administrative law with Prof. Frank Johnson Goodnow, whose appointment
as constitutional legal adviser to the Chinese government has been announced.

Gen. Wang-Shai uses his spare time editing his Shanghai paper, besides contributing numerous political essays to Chinese national organs the world over.

ably for 100 years to come."

SEEK DEATH DATA

Investigation of Infant Mortality
to Be Thorough.

Probe to Reach Small as Well as Large Cities, and Work Will Be Taken Up and Completed in One Place at a Time.

Washington.—An investigation of infant mortality that is something out of the ordinary has just been inaugurated by the children's bureau of the department of labor. It is different in that it goes out of the beaten tracks of such investigations. Instead of going through the large cities it will cover the smaller towns, where the mortality records are not kept so completely as in the larger cities.

Miss Julia C. Lathrop, chief of the children's bureau, who has just returned from a visit to the south, declared that while the investigation had been started she could not at this time estimate when the data
would be complete or even approximately estimate how long it would take to compile the data, leaving out the amount of time which will be consumed in tabulating it and putting it into shape where any sort of conclusions may be reached.

The work will be taken up and completed in one city at a time.
This, of course, will require more time than if it were started simultaneously in various parts of the country, but under the circumstances
this latter course cannot be pursued.
The investigators will go to a town
and take the births for a given year.
Having ascertained these the real work will begin. For the probers will seek to learn the conditions under which the babies were reared and whether they survived the first and subsequent years of their young life.

Not only will the questions cover
the period of the baby's early life,
but will take into consideration every condition under which the child lived.
Whether its parents were able to provide it with sufficient nourishment;
whether it attended school, and if it did, how long; whether or not it was

Miss Julia C. Lathrop.

compelled to go to work, the size of the pay envelope, the conditions under which it worked. These and a great mass of other questions will be sought to be answered.

When all this data is complete it will be tabulated. The tabulations, it is hoped, will show how those who were compelled to work and live under detrimental conditions compared with those who were born of healthy
parents, and had every advantage, both in school and otherwise, for the start in life.

One of the reasons, it is declared,
for not taking the investigation to the larger cities was the lack of appropriations. In view of this fact it was pointed out that the large cities have efficient means of keeping very complete mortality records, and for that reason the children's bureau probe should be confined to the smaller localities.

The results of this investigation,
it is believed, will furnish a basis for decided improvement in the infant mortality of the country and will even result in bringing about better conditions under which children work.
Confined to the smaller localities, it probably will be the first information of this kind which has ever been compiled in such a manner as to show how the many children, pulled through the trials and tribulations through which some of them in their young lives are compelled to pass.

Of course, the children's bureau in the advisory capacity in which it acts cannot compel any change in conditions which it may be shown are needed. But it can make the investigations and it can publish its findings. Then either congress, the state legislatures or what is perhaps stronger, it may move public sentiment,
which in turn will start other machinery going and that will undoubtedly result in working the reforms which are needed.

But when the tell-tale figures are laid down in black and white showing whether the child who has been born and lived under model conditions has a great and material advantage over him who is born and is reared under adversity, it is undoubtedly by those who have the welfare of the little ones at hand that any reforms which may be shown to be needed will be brought about.

BY VIRTUE of a Judgment and Order of sale of the Christian Circuit Court rendered at the February term thereof, 1913, in the above cause, I shall proceed to offer for sale, at the Court-house door in Hopkinsville, Ky., to the highest and best bidder, at PUBLIC AUCTION, on Monday the 2nd day of June 1913, between the hours of 11 A. M. and 2 P. M., (being County Court day), upon a credit of six months, the following described property, to-wit:

Abingdom, Va.—Mrs. Jennie McCall, of this place, says, "I had been troubled with female complaints, for over ten years. I could not walk or stand on my feet, and had been almost confined to the house, for a long time. I began to take Cardui, the woman's tonic, and now I can walk anywhere I want to go. Cardui is worth its weight in gold." This is a high estimate on a plain, herb medicine, yet there are thousands of women who would gladly pay this price for a remedy to relieve their suffering. Cardui has helped others. Why not you? Try it. Your druggist sells it, in $1.00 bottles.—Advertisement.

Sample of Ingalls' Satire. Many years ago, when Senator Ingalls was in the senate, oleomargarine was a bone of contention. The debate led Ingalls to utter one of those epigrammatic sentences which made him famous. "I have never, to my knowledge, tasted oleomargarine," said Ingalls, "but I have stood in the presence of genuine butter with awe for its strength and reverence for its antiquity."

RADICAL CHANGE

In Parcel Post System to Be Recommended.

David J. Lewis, member of congress from Maryland, author of the present parcel post law and chairman of the National Parcel Post Commission, will recommend to Postmaster-General Burleson that radical changes in the parcel post system be made.

In brief Mr. Lewis' recommendations are:

Increase the weight limit from eleven pounds to one hundred pounds on all packages to be collected and delivered.

Have no weight limit on packages which are delivered and will be called for at postal terminals.

Establish a simple system of zones with one hundred miles to each zone.

Establish a rate of about 20 per cent the cost of service, i. e., a rate of 3 cents for the first pound in the first zone and for subsequent zones an additional zone of one hundred miles; no charge to exceed 12 cents a pound.

Restore the old fourth class rate and establish a supplemental parcel or express fourth class, admitting express matter generally, with proper exceptions, to which zone rates shall apply.

Reform the packing regulations so that articles carried by express may be carried in containers when necessary. Reform the insurance and C. O. D. rates so that an article may be insured according to its value.

Establish a fast freight parcel post service by which space in freight cars on the fast freight lines can be bought and used for the carrying of big parcels.

The case of Mrs. Landrum and others against the Woodmen of the World was tried at Cadiz this week and resulted in a verdict and judgement for plaintiffs for the full amount, $1,000. YOMAN COULD NOT WALK

She Was So Ill—Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Pentwater, Mich.—"A year ago I was very weak and the doctor said I had a serious displacement. I had backache and hearing down pains so bad that I could not sit in a chair or walk across the floor and I was in severe pain all the time. I felt discouraged as I had taken everything I could think of and was no better. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now I am strong and healthy."—Mrs. ALICE DARLING, R. F. D. No. 2, Box 77, Pentwater, Mich.

Read What Another Woman says:

Peoria, Ill.—"I had such backaches that I could hardly stand on my feet. I would feel like crying out lots of times, and had such a heavy feeling in my right side. I had such terrible dull headaches every day and they would make me feel so drowsy and sleepy all the time, yet I could not sleep at night."

"After I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a week I began to improve. My backache was less and that heavy feeling in my side went away. I continued to take the Compound and am cured."

"You may publish this if you wish."—Miss CLARA L. GAUWITZ, R. R. No. 4, Box 62, Peoria, Ill.

Such letters prove the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for woman's ills. Why don't you try it?

CLEOPATRA

Was Seen By Thousands At The Rex Theatre.

At every presentation Thursday and Friday the great six-reel attraction was seen by thousands, many attending the second time. Anyone at all familiar with the life of the beautiful Egyptian Queen, her disregard of the proprieties, ambitions and unrestrained in her notorious career, would naturally suppose that many of the acts would be repulsive to the more refined class of people, but such was not the case. Only once does the Queen give her lips to her adorer, Antony.

Miss Helen Gardner, who assumed the title role when the photographs were taken from the presentation, is well known as one of the greatest artists on the stage, and it is useless to say how well she played the role. Bernhardt was not better in her younger days, for today, as to that.

This great movie when it was ready for the public was sold out state by state and Mr. F. M. Taliaferro, of Madisonville, was the purchaser for Kentucky. He brought "Cleopatra" here and was much pleased with the way it was received. He has relatives living here and at Guthrie.

Manager Grau says that he has never had a play that drew better, the reels being seen by capacity houses at each presentation. The sidewalks were crowded up to the hour for closing.

TOBACCO MARKET.

The local tobacco market this week was very active, especially on the loose floors. The sales amounted to 233,415 lbs. against 133,070 lbs. or 97,345 lbs. in excess of last week's transactions. The demand for better grades seems to be increasing, while prices are a shade higher on all grades.

The loose floor top price was attained last Wednesday. The crop of J. W. Mitchell, of the Honey Grove section of this county, was sold on the floor of R. E. & W. D. Cooper, netting Mr. Mitchell $12.50 per hundred—25 cents above any tobacco sold this season.

Mitchell & Ralston, also of the Honey Grove section, sold their crop of leaf at $11.75 per hundred.

The loose floor receipts still continues to drop off, but owing to the season being so near its end, nothing else could be expected.

The hoghead receipts were only 81 hhd., against 169 last week, but the sales were 96 hhd. this week, against 77 last week, an increase of 19 hhd. The hoghead market is still firm or some higher.

The crop for the year has been planted under most favorable conditions and the outlook for an excellent crop is encouraging. It is supposed that the acreage will be about the same as last year, but no larger.

Below is Inspector Abernathy's weekly report:

Unsold stock Jan. 1, 1913, 1125 Hhds.
Receipts for week..... 81 Hhds.
Receipts for year..... 1912 Hhds.
Sales for week..... 96 Hhds.

AN EIGHT-YEAR NAP

Blow on Head Causes Man to Forget That He Was Married.

By H. M. EGBERT.

John Drumfield yawned and stretched himself; then he looked across the room at his watch and sprang out of bed in astonishment. It was nearly ten minutes to ten! This was his wedding morning and he had nearly forgotten! There was just time to be at the church in Brooklyn by half past eleven.

It was to be a quiet wedding. Lucy and he had loved each other for years, despite the objections of her father, one of the leaders of the bar, who wanted her to make a brilliant marriage. But he had become reconciled at last, and, with his backing, Drumfield's own law practice had improved sufficiently to warrant his taking out the wedding license.

Drumfield paused in irresolution, for his mind was as hazy as though he had overslept for five years instead of one night. These were not his rooms; this was a hotel. A placard, announcing that one ring would bring the bell-boy and two the chambermaid stood over the faucet. Above the mantel was a notification that smoking was not permitted and that the management would not be responsible for valuables unless left in the safe. Drumfield's head was aching badly. As he passed the mirror he caught sight of his face. He had gone to bed a young man and now his hair was turning gray, and there were lines in his face that had not been there when he retired to bed.

Thoroughly alarmed, he dressed himself and hastened down. At the hotel desk a young clerk looked up and smiled. "Hurt your head?" he asked. Drumfield put up his hand and found that his scalp was gashed. It must have bled freely during the night, to judge from the evidences. Drumfield muttered something and walked away. At the stand he bought a newspaper. The next moment he was clutched at space and staring in terror at the date on it. He had gone to sleep in his rooms in August, 1905; and he had awakened in a cheap hotel in February, 1913. He had slept eight years!

He then hurriedly took the subway to Brooklyn. It seemed to him that the subway had not run to Brooklyn when he was last awake, but this was only a minor problem now. He got out at the Borough Hall and stood looking round him uncertainly. "Want a cab?" asked a taxi driver. Drumfield put his hand into his pocket mechanically and found a pocket-book containing a five-dollar bill and two of the value of a dollar each. He nodded and leaped in. Then, glancing into the side glass, he saw that his head was swollen and that a mass of blood had matted his hair.

Five minutes later the cab stopped opposite a deep excavation and the cabman descended and opened the door.

"Here's the church you asked for, Boss," he said, pointing to the hole in the ground.

Drumfield jumped out. "What do you mean?" he shouted in bewilderment.

"You said the DeKalb Avenue church," answered the driver with a grin. "It was pulled down two months ago. I can't help it if you've overslept yourself, Mister. Two dollars, please."

Drumfield flung him the two bills and strode away, while the driver looked after him uncertainly. The guy seemed crazy; perhaps he had escaped from a sanitarium. Should he go after him? His attention was attracted, however, by a fare, and reluctantly he sacrificed a possibility to a probability. By this time Drumfield was lost in the crowd.

His mind was whirling. He knew that Lucy would not have waited seven years for him—besides, he could not remember her address, or her father's. Who was he? Was he a rising young lawyer with a happy marriage before him, or a crazy man? He must go cautiously. He must not betray himself. In his pocket he found a key and the pocket-book, and inside the latter a printed card bearing the name Henry Patterson. The name seemed to awaken vague reminiscences in his mind and gave him his clue. The address was Nassau street. He would go to Patterson. But who was Patterson?

Then the probable solution burst upon him. He must be Patterson. He had heard of cases of double personality, in which the afflicted subject assumed another name and carried on his business without recollection of his previous life, until he awakened to resume that where he had left it off.

He reached the building and was shot up in the elevator for eleven stories. Upon the door of a room at the end of the passage he saw his name. He opened it and entered. A woman and a girl sat at two desks and as he approached they looked up at him curiously. The woman's face was hard and devoid of any expression. Drumfield moved toward the inner door, and suddenly the woman sprang to her feet.

"Mr. Patterson!" she exclaimed. "I knew you from your face at once. Are you going into your office?"

"Yes," answered Drumfield curtly.

"It's dangerous, sir. I shouldn't have thought you would have come at this time, with the investigation on and the district attorney hunting for you. Why, Mr. Patterson, I've been here ten months and you never showed up until now when you're wanted."

"I always show up when I'm wanted," muttered Drumfield, entering as the woman unlocked the door. Inside was a bare desk and an office chair. "They've seized the books, but I've got the papers in duplicate here," said the woman with a chuckle, and, turning up the carpet, she lifted a board in the floor and pulled out a mass of documents.

"O, we'll make them smart," she said maliciously. "We got one of 'em last night—Drumfield!"

"What!" shouted Drumfield. The woman stared at him. "I thought our fellows would have told you," she said. "Slugged him with a sandbag on Twenty-fifth street, they said, and served him right, the prying knave."

He was entirely at sea. If he was Patterson, who was Drumfield? And where was Lucy? The thought of her sent a shiver of apprehension through him. He must have been conducting some criminal business, then; the police were after him! He turned to the papers with feverish energy. Only a few minutes showed him the nature of his occupation. He was conducting a loan business, and he was the shark. No doubt the police were engaged on one of their periodical crusades against such people.

Into the half-ream of documents had been compressed the pitiful tragedies of many lives. School teachers, small clerks, city officials—all were in his net. He, Henry Patterson, sat there like a spider and sucked the blood out of these fellow-creatures who had written down their obligations on these pages. There were legal and illegal bonds and undertakings, salary assignments; there was a special fund for tracking down absconding debtors. Within an hour Drumfield's trained legal mind had shown him the exact status of his enterprise.

"Mr. Ebenezer Jones is outside, sir," said the woman, putting her hand face in at the door. She ran her fingers over the documents and pulled one out. "That's him," she said, snickering. "Borrowed $50 three years ago; owes paid back $195 to date, and still owes us $122.50. There's a dollar fine for being ten minutes late with the last payment." She whispered: "The sucker will stand a lot of blood-sucking yet. I told him we might renew the loan for a consideration. Shall I show him in?"

"Yes, and stay with us," said Drumfield, quickly. "I'm not quite familiar with the details of the business here."

The woman snickered again and called the man inside. He came in humbly, hat in hand. He was an old, rheumatic, farmer-looking man, and the moment he was within the door he fell upon his knees at Drumfield's feet.

"For God's sake, give me a chance," he pleaded. "My wife died yesterday, and I've got to keep her out of a pauper's grave. Let me renew, and I'll work my fingers to the bone for you."

"That's how you all talk," said the loan shark clerk, contemptuously. "I will go in!" shouted a voice outside. "You shall not keep me back. I'm going to see Mr. Patterson himself."

The woman clerk swung around and filled the doorway with her burly body. Outside a young woman pressed impotently against the closing door.

"Let her come in!" called Drumfield, and, reluctantly, the clerk let her pass.

"Another of them down-and-outs," she shrilled. "Case No. 247. School teacher, borrowed $40 to pay for her sister's illness, and owes us $125, and says she's too poor to settle. Ugh! I'd settle her."

Slowly John Drumfield drew out the two papers. He tore them into fragments and let the pieces flutter out of the open window.

"Your debts are paid," he said to the old man and the girl. And while the woman stared in horror and amazement he quickly ripped the rest of the documents to pieces. "That ends this business," he said.

Outside there came a hammering at the door. The woman turned quickly. "I thought you was mad," she whimpered. "Now I know what you are, you dog. You're one of the government men. Oh, God! I've queerred the business. Seventy-five thousand dollars gone up in the air!"

With a crash the outside door yielded and two burly men came in at a run, followed by an elderly gentleman. They made straight for Drumfield.

"Got you, Patterson," they chuckled. "Come along now. I guess he's a nifty fellow, to come here, with seven indictments pending, eh?" He snapped the handcuffs on Drumfield's wrists.

Suddenly the elderly gentleman behind them uttered a cry.

"John!" he exclaimed. "How did you get here? Take off those handcuffs, boys; this is John Drumfield!" John Drumfield found himself looking into the face of his prospective father-in-law, now the district attorney.

"John!" cried the latter, "what in heaven's name are you doing here? I spent all last night searching for you. They heard you had been snugged by Patterson's men. Lucy has been half crazy. When you didn't come home last night she left the children with Della and went—"

"Children? Whose children?"

"Why, yours and hers, of course, John. Why do you look at me like that? Have you been dreaming?"

Suddenly the clouds rolled away from Drumfield's brain, and he remembered all.

"I guess I have," he said, with a laugh. "I dreamed that I had gone to sleep eight years ago, and that Lucy and I had never been married."

ONE ESSENTIAL WAS LACKING

Reason Old Man Hadn't Caught Any Fish Was Simply Because He Hadn't Been Fishing.

John D. Rockefeller and a party of friends were taking a trip across country in Georgia last fall when they came to a stream which they had to cross by ferry. The ferry-boat was operated by a white-haired old negro, and while they were floating across Mr. Rockefeller tried to make conversation.

"Jack," he asked the old man, "have you caught any fish today?"

"Naw, suh," replied Jack, dejectedly. "The fishing," observed Rockefeller, "must be pretty poor."

"I spec' it is," agreed Jack, sadly.

"You haven't caught any fish at all?"

"Not a one."

"That seems strange," continued Rockefeller.

"It do," said Jack, and still his bearing was that of a man weighed down by woe.

"Well, asked Rockefeller, "why is it, do you think, you haven't caught any fish?"

"Humph," said Jack still mournful. "I ain't been fishing today."—Popular Magazine.

Three-Night Run.

Blessed with a sense of humor, Sir Henry Irving was not shut up in his dignity as in a tower. He thoroughly appreciated a palpable hit, even at his own expense.

At a rehearsal of "King Arthur," for which Sir Arthur Sullivan composed incidental music and Sir Edward Burne-Jones designed special costumes, he chanced to overhear the brief monologue that follows:

"Sir Emery Irvin, Sir Arthur Sullivan, Sir Edward Burne-Jones!" came in a growl from a dark corner behind the scenes. "Three bloomin' knights—and that's about what I give 'em!"

Irving liked to repeat this outburst, which the comparative failure of "King Arthur" made peculiarly opposite.—Youth's Companion.

Into His Own Trap.

In a suit lately tried the plaintiff testified that his financial position had always been a good one. The opposing counsel took him in hand for cross-examination and undertook to bring down his testimony upon this point.

"Have you ever been bankrupt?" asked the counsel.

"I have not."

"Now, be careful," admonished the lawyer, with raised finger. "Did you ever stop payment?"

"Yes."

"Ah! I thought we should get at the truth," observed the counsel, with an unpleasant smile. "When did this suspension of payment occur?"

"When I paid all I owed."

Riders.

"In some cases," said the industrial expert, "we find that the by-product is more important than the original article."

"I have noticed that," replied Senator Sorghum, "in connection with appropriation bills."

FOND WIFE WAS PRACTICAL

Husband Discovers His Young Bride Has Arranged With Her Mother as to His Allowance.

"My dear," murmured the young man, after the usual half-hour of whispering and cuddling, "we must now talk about practical things. It seems a profanation, I know, but it will be well to get some of these things arranged."

"Yes, darling," she answered fond-
ly. "I am going to be a practical wife, and I have already thought of ways and means. I have even talked them over with mamma. What do you want to discuss first?"

"Well, there's the subject of a certain allowance every week for spending money."

"I've thought of that."

"Oh—er—you have?"

"Yes—now you mustn't think me mercenary. But I've talked it over with mamma, and she agrees that a certain allowance is right and proper.
Now, your salary is $3,000 a year.
Isn't it?"

"Yes, and I want it to go as far as possible toward your happiness."

"I know it, precious boy. So I've decided that about $5 a week will be about right."

"Why, little girl, that won't be enough! You'll have to have—"

"Yes, mamma and I think it will be a plenty, you extravagant thing. You'll have your breakfasts and dinners at home, and you don't drink, and you've told me that you only eat light lunches. So $5 a week ought to pay your car fare and give you quite a lot to spend just as you like."—Cleveland
Plain Dealer.

MONEY WASTED.

Harold (yawning)—Y-a-a-s, weally,
it cost me ten thousand a year, just to live, doncher know.

Evelyn—How foolish of you to pay
it! It isn't worth it!

Those Gift Cigars.

Hemmenhaw handed his best friend
a cigar.

"Have a smoke," he said.

"Sure," said the friend.

"There, I'm glad that's off my mind!"

"Off your mind?"

"Yes; that cigar is the last of a box
my wife gave me for Christmas, and I will tell you in confidence I have been handing them out all day. You got the last. Ha, ha!"

"Well, the laugh is on you."

"On me?"

"Yes; I went with your wife to pick out those cigars, and they were the very best I could find in town."

Rapid Descent.

At the exhibition of post-impressionist paintings in New York, two Boston men were standing in front of the much-talked-of canvas alleged to represent a figure descending the stairs.

"This is the worst yet," cried one.
"Look at it! It is simply a tangled mass of streaks and splashes."

"I think," said the other after gazing at it a moment, "that the fault lies in the title, which is not sufficiently explanatory. It should tell us that it is a figure descending the stairs after the careless scrub woman had left a cake of soap on the top step."

Proving It.

"Foreigners are always misplacing prepositions in their speech."

"Sure. The one who married my daughter told a friend they were coming back from their travels to live
WITH the old man, when he meant
ON the old man."

His Character.

Lady—So your husband is in jail
again?

Poor Woman—Yes'm.

Lady—He does not seem to be a man of stable character.

Poor Woman—Well, I don't know
as to that, mum. He's a hostler.

What Aldrich Missed.

"Do you think that we should have a more elastic currency?" asked the Old Fogey.

"It is elastic enough," replied the Grouch. "Why don't they make it more adhesive?"

Compensations.

"Isn't it horrible, this scientific proposition to kill idiots in their infancy?"

"All wrong, of course, but then there would be none left to rock boats."

Element of Uncertainty.

"What is your idea of the tariff?"

"Well," replied Senator Sorghum,
"the tariff is a good thing to get votes with before one election. But it's mighty liable to make you lose on before the next."

A Strange Story.

Argyle, Mich.—Mrs. Wm. H. Car-
son, in a letter from Argyle, says:
"I was almost wild with pain in my head, and other severe pains, due to womanly troubles. Cardui gave me great relief at once. Further use of Cardui raised me from my bed of agony. Cardui saved my life, and I can't be thankful enough for what it did for me." Whether seriously sick, or simply ailing, take Cardui,
the woman's tonic. As a general tonic for women, to improve the appetite and build up the constitution, Cardui is in a class by itself.
Those who have used it say it does the work; it relieves, it cures. Try
it. Your druggist has it.

HAD NEVER SEEN ONE CHILD

Woman, Noted for Inquisitiveness,
Finally Finds Out Why Father
Hadn't Seen Baby.

"I have a wife and four children in Chicago, and I have never seen one of them," remarked a Chicago man one evening.

Mrs. Dodge, who was noted for her inquisitiveness, looked toward him in great surprise. After a moment's pause
she asked:

"Were you ever blind, Mr. Evans?"

"No, madam," was the reply.

"Did you marry a widow?" the woman inquired.

"No, indeed," he said.

There was silence again while the inquisitive woman tried to solve the problem to her satisfaction. Failing to do so, she asked:

"Didn't I understand you to say, Mr.
Evans, that you had a wife and four children in Chicago and had never seen one of them?"

"Yes, that was what I said."

"How can it be that you never saw one of them, Mr. Evans?" asked the woman.

"Why, madam," replied the man,
"one of them was born after I left."—

Cholly—Will your sister be engaged

Lulu—Well, it's taken her long enough to get engaged.

"Crossed the Pond."

"I have a friend I want you to meet."

"Where is he?"

"That's the man over there in a gray suit."

"Oh, I overheard him talking just now. He's too big a man for me to meet."

"What do you mean?"

"He calls the Atlantic ocean a pond."

Between Girls.

"Why the cogitation?"

"I dislike to take my engagement ring to a jeweler, and yet I should like to know what it cost. But it would embarrass me to take it to a jeweler."

"You needn't. There are at least two girls in our set who have had it valued."

Merely for Show.

"Does your wife permit you to keep a pass key?"

"Yes."

"That shows she's a broad-minded
woman."

"Not so fast. I don't know where my wife got the pass key she lets me
keep. It doesn't fit our door."

Nobody Knows.

"Spectators try to rattle players at

"Yes."

"And that is considered all right."

"Well?"

"I saw the same thing tried at a billiard tournament and the offender was promptly ejected. Why is this?"

Big Deal.

"How's business?"

"Fine," said the real estate man.

tory site, and a row of small bricks.

"Dashby took too many highballs
last night and wayed sentimental."

"He did, eh?"

"Yes, and said he sprinkled his past with tears."

"Umph! He'd better use chloride of lime."

A Simile.

"To say a man is like a fish out of water means that he is decidedly out of his natural environment."

"Quite so. That's just the way an old-fashioned gentleman feels when he converses with an up-to-date
male whose fad is eugenics."

"Laugh And The World Laughs With You."

The poet was right—there is nothing so catching as joyous laughter. Next to a kiss a laugh is the most popular thing in the world. The supply of kisses is limited, being largely controlled by a fair but capricious trust. The supply of laughs, however, is practically unlimited so long as you don't get too grouchy to look for them. One reason for the remarkable success of The Chicago Record-Herald is its daily recognition of the value of kindly, wholesome fun. The "Whimwhams and Sentiment" column of S. E. Kiser, the humorist and poet, is one of the brightest things in American journalism. The new department called "Jones' Daily Magazine" offers a diverting assortment of jokes, stories and amusing pictures every day in the week. The "Vest Pocket Essays" of George Fitch, printed daily in The Record-Herald, are gems of refined wit and humor. Each one is as good as a circus. And there is always a smile or a laugh in French's cartoons, bringing a cheery greeting as you pick up the paper each morning.

In The Sunday Record-Herald the colored comic section is full of laughter for young and old, and these pictures are free from the vulgarity and mischievous suggestions that have barred so many comic sections from refined homes. Then there is always a lot of high-class humor in the Sunday Magazine of The Record-Herald, led by Sewell Ford's famous tales concerning Shorty McCabe and his red-headed rival, Torchy. The Record-Herald has the right idea. Clean humor doubles the welcome of a good newspaper.

WALL & MCGOWAN

Bob Taylor Lives,

In the two bright and beautiful books just issued, "Lectures and Best Literary Productions," and "Life and Career" of Senator Robert Love, Taylor, handsomely illustrated, you cannot hear again his voice or see the humorous curl of his lips, that convulsed a continent with laughter, but, within the covers of these volumes, are the pictures woven of his wondrous words, and, laughing through their sunny pages, are all of the inimitable stories which he told to the multitudes. In "Life and Career," pens of genius have traced his romantic life from its morning in "Happy Valley," through his young and roseate dreams, through stress and storm, through cheering throngs, and on into the waiting shadows, loved and laurel crowned.

We expect to sell millions of these books. First edition going fast.

Mr. Watkins is one of Louisville's liveliest business men and can justly claim to be the father of back yard gardening and flower growing, particularly the first.
